MEN AT WORK

(A collection of recipes from some of the husbands in the village)

COOKERY FOR MEN

There is often a feeling amongst men either that they don't know, and never can know, about cookery—a kind of culinary agnosticism—or that once they have tried to cook and succeeded, they will be tied to a hot stove for evermore.

However, there are occasions when an essay in the kitchen is no bad thing; it is nice for one's wife to be able to go out for the day and not have to rush back to cook a meal—better still if it can be waiting for her. It is equally a good thing to be able to look after the family if one's wife is ill. And sometimes, choosing the right moment, of course, you can sweep into the kitchen with a 'let me do it today'.

I tend to specialise in a sort of pseudo-Indian cookery, though I can make tea and boil eggs as well. The pseudo-Indian has the advantage that it is fairly rapid, should be very tasty, and can use a wide variety of odds and ends when there's 'nothing in the house'.

The directions are fairly empirical, but after one or two attempts you will doubtless get the feel of the process and adapt it to your needs and the available materials.

I must first point out that Indian should be synonymous with delicate spices, rather than just hotness. I usually make two dishes, one of which can have a hot gravy.

One should never use curry powder, but curry paste. Curry paste retains its flavour much longer than curry powder, and may be used in conjunction with garam marsala, a mixture of spices which is much less nondescript than curry powder. You can buy it quite easily, but if you want to make it yourself, grind together 2 oz black peppercorns, 2 oz coriander seeds, 1½ oz caraway seeds, ½ oz cloves and 20 large cardamoms (skinned). Mix with ½ oz ground cinnamon, and keep in an airtight jar.

The first operation is to make the basic gravy. Then you can either throw in all the other constituents, or divide it for separate dishes.

Put ¼ lb butter into a frying pan or saucepan, and melt it gently on the stove. Chop 4 medium sized onions. About half an onion should be carefully sliced and the long curly bits put into a bowl—we will make some onion pickle later.

Tip the rest of the onion into the butter, turning it over and over, letting it fry gently. Then add a pinch of salt, 2 teaspoonsful of garam marsala, 2 teaspoonsful of mixed herbs and 2-3 chopped cloves of garlic if you like it. Keep turning it over, and add more butter if necessary.

To make the onion pickle, crush 4-5 chillies into the bowl of onion and mix; then add some tomato sauce sparingly and mix again. If you have any chilli sauce, you can use this instead of the chillies and tomato sauce. The flavour improves if the mixture stands for at least an hour or two.

You must now prepare the main dish. If you are going to use mushrooms, skin them, cut them into mushroom-shaped pieces and fry gently in butter. Eggs should be hard-boiled and shelled. Meat should be cut into cubes; if it has already been cooked, well and good. If it is raw, fry the pieces in butter, turning them over and over until they are grey.

If you are going to make two dishes, divide the onion gravy now. If you are using raw meat, put some of the gravy into a pressure cooker, as this will speed the process.

If you want to make one of the dishes hot, add curry paste to taste now, and stir in until it is properly dispersed.

Open a large tin of tomatoes, and divide between the gravies. This should give enough liquid for the rest of the cooking, but if more liquid is needed, water or, better, milk, may be added.

You now have the ingredients for a number of different dishes, so it is a matter of sorting out what you want. You can have hot meat, and egg-and-mushroom, or meat-and-mushroom and hot potato, or whatever. You see what I mean about being empirical, but it's fun.

About half an hour before you think it will be ready, put on the rice. Use long grain rice; about 2 oz per person is usually enough. Put the rice into a large saucepan, and wash it well to get rid of as much of the adherent starch as possible. Then add some salt and, if you want it to be yellow, turmeric, and boil.

If you have no hot water available, put on a kettle. Put the oven on low. When the rice is cooked—try it and see—strain it, wash it with hot water, and put it in the oven on a dish to dry and keep warm. Turn it over from time to time so that it doesn't stick together. You can add raisins if you like and disperse them throughout.

When all is ready, get your family arranged round the table, and serve. Don't forget to lay the table beforehand, and to warm the plates and dishes!

An interesting pudding is bananas cut longitudinally, fried (in butter, of course) and then put in the oven with brown sugar, rum and lemon juice.

SAUSAGE PORTUGUESE
4 persons

1 lb pork or beef sausages
1 onion
1 large tomato
1 tablespoon plain flour

Finely chop the tomato and onion. Lightly fry in pan with knob of cooking fat. Take from heat and dry up the mixture with the flour.

Make the sauce by slowly adding hot stock (made with stock cube if preferred) to the mixture. Season.

Place the sausages in a baking dish, bring the sauce to the boil, pour over the sausages and cook in 350° F. oven, Gas mark 4 for approximately 30 minutes until sausages are cooked.

The sauce is improved by adding a tablespoon of red wine after the sausages are cooked.

2 oz prawns (60 gms)—you can leave these out if you have not got them
1 small packet frozen peas
Coriander seeds
½-1 teaspoon paprika
Chilli sauce
1 tablespoon soya sauce

Fry bacon and rinds until crisp. Remove from pan. Fry the onions until soft with extra fat if necessary. Add coriander seeds and paprika. Fry until tender. Add luncheon meat and chicken. Add chilli sauce. Add rice to frying pan. Stir to prevent sticking. Stir in soya sauce. Add mushrooms, prawns, peas and bacon. Dish up. Make omelette with 2 eggs.
